

1. The fight for women's rights is continual, not just single revolutions that occur at any time. The movement in the 60's should be thought of as a continuation of the movement in the early 1900's.
2. All three movements were led by men who believed that women were not supposed to help in their efforts in pushing for civil rights. Many women formed their own organizations to help in these movements.
3. Her main message is that women have been oppressed for a long, but they have been afraid to fight against the oppression.
4. The Women's Right Movement also pushed against the war in Vietnam.
